According to Blake and the policeman, pend-ing the arrival of the ambulance, she gave her husband a liberat piece of her mind. At the hospital, Mrs. Blake assisted the doctors in the process of syphoning her stomach. She had changed her mind about wanting to die. The hospital physicians en-

MUSIC CAUSED DISCORD IN A FLAT.

Mrs. Ritter's Piano Melodies Had No Charm to Soothe the Feelings of Mrs. Murphy.

HER HUSBAND COULDN'T SLEEP

When Musical Neighbor Would Not Rest Mrs. Murphy Retaliated With Tin Pans-Summons Now Issued.

Music, both instrumental and yocal, is the cause of the discord that exists between Mrs. Lena Murphy, whose husband works by night and sleeps by day, and Mrs. S. A. Ritter, whose husband works by day and sleeps by night. The discord reached a climax Friday night when Mrs. Murphy employed various implements in an effor to produce a counter-irritant to the noise: made the previous morning by Mrs. Ritter's voice and Mrs. Ritter's plano. Yesterday Mrs. Ritter procured a police summons against Mrs. Murphy, and the case will come up for trial in the Second Dis trict Police Court to-morrow.

Mrs. Ritter occupies a flat on the secon floor of the house at No. 2113 South Ninth street. Mrs. Murphy lives on the floor below. Mrs. Ritter's husband is employed by an iron works company in East St. Louis, Mrs. Murphy's husband works in the en-gine-room of the Imperial Electric Light

Mrs. Ritter is devoted to music, both vocal and instrumental. She practices an hour or so regularly every day in both, and the Murphys aver that sleep is impossible while the plano is sounding and the melodious strains of "I Dream That I Dwe-eit in Ma-arbie Halls" come floating down the stairway, filling and thrilling every crack and crevice of their apartments ery crack and crevice of their apartments. Mr. Murphy complained, but to no effect. Then the trouble began. Mrs. Murphy determined to make a few disturbing noises herself. So thenceforth, while Mrs. Ritter played on the plane by day and sang the songs of the day, Mrs. Murphy made her sewing machine hum by night, and sang "The Song of the Shirt," "She May Have Seen Better Days," and a number of other equally sentimental songs.

The sewing machine, however, was no match for the piane, and Mrs. Murphy, according to Miss Ritter, adopted other methods of making things lively. Friday night, according to the statement of the Ritters and others in the neighborhood, peculiarly distracting noises emanated from her

George H. Graves Has Something to Say to Mr. Rosen.

George H. Graves, one of the army of commercial travelers put out of business by the Tobacco Trust, has the following to say to Mr. Rosen, the defender of the tobacco and other trusts, which he says he hopes Mr. Rosen will put in his pipe and smoke:

"The more I think of Mr. Rosen's statements in reference to the tobacco business and the trusts the more I feel it my duty not to remain silent any longer. I am a victim. I was transferred from the Drummond Tobacco Company, along with other stock, at the time of the sale to the trust, without my permission.

"Now, what I wish to say is this: I would like to meet Mr. Rosen or any other tobacco trust man on the stump, or any other place, except under the bed, and I think I could give them a few lines which would warm their hearts and make their souls ache.

"I could tell them of the joys before the trust, and of the troubles after the trust. I would carry them over the ground in such a way they would never want to cover it again. I would show them happy homes, bright faces, plenty to eat and drink; loving mothers, wives and sisters, and bright-eyed little ones to meet us on our return from work, before the trusts. We were happy then, because we had good jobs and were well paid. Our companies were making money, and we, too, were making money, and we, too, were making money, and we companies were making money.

"After the trust was formed all hope vanished; our identity was lost, our self-respect gone; we could not respect ourselves, hence could not ask it of others, and were powerless to demand it of the trust. We could see no way to make an honest living with the trust, Salaries were cut very low, all trade expenses were withdrawn and only a mere existence could be hoped for. In addition to this, they compelled us to make out a daily and a weekly report, which required the skill of a Philadelphia lawyer and all our time on Sunday. We had to be roustabouts and bill posters, as well as upsto-date salesmen, to hold these places, which paid all the way from $12 to $18 a week, which, before the trust, paid from $18 to $55 a week.

Chicago Stock Yards Employes Asked About Trusts and Boers. REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Chicago, Oct. 12.—Senator Mark Hanna tried to make a political speech in the big ient in the stock yards district to-night. He scored a failure. It was not his fault. The audience did not care to hear him discuss ampaign issues from the standpoint of the party in power. So it hooted, jeered and derided the Senator from Ohio.

But it took the 5.000 people who crowded into the tent an hour and a half to convince the national chairman that it really did not care to hear him. During that time he talked almost continuously, but not 500 people heard him.

Senator Hanna was greeted with a roar of cheers and hisses when he stepped to the front. Ex-Aiderman McInery appealed to the crowd for free speech for the Senator. The appeal was lost is the roar of catcalls and questions that were thundered at the Republican chairman. Senator Hanna's first sentence was a defi to the crowd. "If I have to stand here until morning I shall make my speech," he shouted. "Three cheers for Bryan!" was the answer from the audience. Then they went at it hammer and tongs, First, Senator Hanna would talk for a minute; then the audience would talk for three minutes, and later, the audience did most of the talking.

later, the audience did most of the talking.

When a spectator yelled at him to ask why he had said there were no trusts, although the Republican platform had declared against them, he repeated the explanation that he made at Cleveland. When a sturdy stock yards man asked him why it was that this country was so hostile to the Boers, he answered that it had gone as far as it could when it expressed its sympathy for the Republic.

"Webster Davis did not think so," was the reply from the crowd.

"Webster Davis got $250,000 from President Kruger." retorted Mr. Hanna. "He entered into collusion with Macrum to deceive the Transvaal Government. That's what's the matter with him."
